

Watch out for genetic engineering! No GE oil for restaurants

To the owner or manager

Over 70 per cent of Germans reject the use of genetic engineering in food. You will undoubtedly respect this wish of consumers in purchasing for your restaurant.

Some manufacturers of edible oil sell products made from genetically engineered soybeans, however. Please pay attention therefore to the list of ingredients. If oils have been made from GE plants you'll find "Hergestellt aus gentechnisch veränderten Sojabohnen" – made from genetically modified soybeans – stated about the ingredients on the packaging.

If you use GE oils in food, you have to inform your customers of this on your menu. This is laid down by the labelling regulations of April 2004 for genetically modified foodstuffs. Violations of this obligation to label can be punished by fines of up to 50,000 euro.

In Germany there are enough companies that can sell you GE-free edible oil. You can find some of them overleaf.
